The English Press is eloquent in praise or the seem by the notices following:

"Mrs. Gore has produced nothing more worthy of her name and fame than "progress and Prejudice."

"In execution of plot, naturalness of incident, facility of invention, and purity of style. "Progress and Prejudice! touched knowledge of the world, sharpened and polished by refining studies and rendered prelific by active exercise and well ordered cultivation."

"We look upon this work as certainly one of the very best which Mrs. Gore has written. If she deals with the vices of human nature, she touches them in a viscorus, healthy manner, which justifies the admiration of the reader. If she treats of the virtues of a better order of thought and feeling, she never praises mankind at the expense of religious conviction or homely truth."

readers of fiction, who will find this one of her most pleasing work."

It is conceded to be the best Mrs. Gore has written."

From The Daily Transcript, Fortsmouth, Vs.

It is an admirable story, most excellently told."

From The Newport News, R. L.

It can't help but be popular—it has all the elements."

From The Piedmont Whig, Vs.

It is a highly interesting and well written story."

From The Republican, Toledo, Onio.

The work before us embodies all the graces of style which have rendered its authorses a general favorite, and is moreover imbued with a spirit of high morality and a progressive tone that met strongly commend it to favor."

From The Sentinel, Eastport, Ma.

'It is an excellent story beautifully told."

From The State Gazette, Annapolis City, Md.

To convey lessons of sound morality and inculcate ideas of domestic virtue needs considerable tact and much knowledges of human nature, but these requirements are fully possessed by the author of 'Progress and Prejodice.'"

From The Bemocrat, Danville, Pa.

'If you must read nevels read good once, and of those who claim that distinctive title we certainly know none whose pretensions are better founded than Mrs. Gore's, and of her works none certainly are equal to this her latest production."
